Nerve 24 Stewart Lee Competition

In the last edition of Nerve we set a competition for a lucky Nerve reader to win some great Stewart Lee goodies, including a signed copy of his book 'How I Escaped My Certain Fate, The Life and Deaths of a Stand-Up Comedian'. We asked the following question: "Who was Stewart Lee's comedic partner in the 1990's BBC TV series 'Fist of Fun'?" The answer is: Richard Herring. The winner was Matthew Griffiths from Wallasey. Matthew is shown here receiving his prizes in the Nerve office.

Nerve Supports Creative

People

New or unknown writers, journalists, artists and photographers often have difficulty getting feedback or finding an audience for their work. Nerve wants to promote such creativity through our grassroots organisation. We want to encourage and help with the development of confidence and skills. If your work doesn't appear in the magazine straight away, there's a place for it online. Constructive feedback will always be given.

On 25th December 1914, as day dawned over a Flanders battlefield, soldiers who had faced each other in battle climbed out of their trenches. In the middle of no-man's land the battle-weary soldiers, who had hours before been intent on fighting each other, tentatively shook hands. Most could not speak each other's language, but gifts of cigars and food were exchanged as the sounds of war were silenced for a moment in time.

Amidst this uneasy peace, someone produced a football and the war was left behind. The soldiers threw off their tiredness and as if they were playing in a local park, the opposing forces united as one and began to play. Peace broke out, men became boys again and for a short time they could forget the cold, the wet and their fear. The game set them free.

A hundred years on, an iconic statue is now being created to > commemorate and celebrate this truce and the most famous football game in history. It will be a symbol of peace and hope and a call for a renewed worldwide cessation of violence in honour of those brave boys who "joined together and decided not to fight".

The resin sculpture will be transported from Liverpool and be exhibited in Germany, before travelling to Flanders to be temporarily installed on the site of the truce on Christmas Day. 100 years on.

Day, 100 years on. The work being sculpted is entitled 'All Together Now', recalling the song by The

Farm - coincidentally being re-released also to mark the centenary - which was inspired by the truce. The statue depicts the meeting of a British and a German soldier over a football, deep in the mud between the lines on that first Christmas of the war. The soldiers appear to be shaking hands but are not not quite touching, forming a space in which a visitor can insert their own hand to complete the union. A chance for a moments reflection on how far we are from true peace and brotherhood and the part each of us has to play in that dream. We want the work
